A tank destroyer produced in large numbers by Germany at the last stages of World War II. The "cheap, light, small" tank met all three important conditions, but since it was a bit too small, the interior was cramped so tankers didn't like it. It's good at ambush attacks and defensive warfare.

WHOA! A ROMAN SALUTE!

KV2, a heavy tank nicknamed "Dreadnought" by the Soviets that depended on it and "Gigant" (Giant) by the Germans as that were frightened by it, it's this one! It's hard to use in a lot of ways, but with a maximum thickness of 110 mm its heavy armor surpasses the Tiger's, it's equipped with a hilariously huge turret and a 152mm howitzer of exceptional explosive power, truly a moving fortress! One time, a single tank sitting on a road while repelling various attacks "like you'd expect from a dreadnought" cut off the enemy supply line for more than two full days... This is the legendary "Monster on top of the road", ~Vor.

FURTHERMORE, THE ENGINE IS A MAYBACH HL234P20 WITH AN OUTPUT OF 950HP!!
VROOOM
IT'S THE PHANTOM ENGINE THAT THE F SERIES WAS PLANNED TO BE EQUIPPED WITH, AN IMPROVED VERSION OF THE MAYBACH HL234!
IT HAD IMPLEMENTED THE AVERAGE OUTPUT OF THE SECOND-GENERATION OF POST-WAR TANKS!※
Aah! THIS ENGINE'S SOUND...♡
Huh...?
KANON, I BET YOU CAN'T BEAR ANY LONGER EITHER!♡
NOT YET! THERE ARE STILL FINAL ADJUSTMENTS TO BE DONE!
COME ON ALREADY— I WANT TO RIDE IT——
※Post-war is a general term for the tanks many countries had produced (and deployed) in the 60s~70s era
The German Leopard 1 had 830HP
The Japanese Type 74 had 720
By the way, the original Panther had 700
We've added about as much power as an average fast car has!!
Tanks' engine powers are awesome, aren't they!?

WHAT'S WITH THAT SURPRISED FACE?
DID YOU THINK-
